Outsmart hiring team

Principal Product Designer

People still have to come back tomorrow, even if they are tired of lectures and debt. The next step has to be obvious. The interface has to look cared for. And it has to stay one system as it grows.

At FamilySearch, beginners showed up hoping to feel a connection and got a toolbox built for hobbyists. I led 26 discovery experiences. Each one started with a person already in their tree and gave them one thing to do next. The next year we kept 95% more members and 107% more other people. I made that the standard and worked with outside designers so it stayed one product.

I spent seven years at Entrata on that same kind of work. For about a year I was Product Lead with an engineering team, and I stayed with it from the problem through ship. Staff already knew the Pricing screen, so when one promotion needed to hold more than one offer, we extended that screen. After launch, 8,290 specials used the new rules. Homebody, the resident app, landed at 4.4 out of 5 on iOS from more than 600 reviews in six months. I use AI when I prototype. If AI is in the product, a person still decides.

I have not managed a product design team, and I have not designed a college. I have led the work, helped other designers share one system, and shipped consumer products people came back to. I live in Pleasant Grove, so Lehi is a normal drive. I would like to walk you through the work.

Sincerely,

Cody Duke
