Caliber hiring team

Product Designer

I am applying for the Product Designer role at Caliber. Josh Holman recommended I reach out. Your product has to change what salespeople actually do after a set of calls, not sit as another training library they ignore. That is a retention problem, and it is the design work I want to do.

At FamilySearch, beginners arrived hoping to feel a connection to their family and met a toolbox built for hobbyists. I led product design for 26 personalized discovery experiences. Each one started from a person already in the tree and offered one next action instead of a search lesson. Retention rose 95% for members and 107% for other users versus the prior year. Calendar used birthdays already in the tree as a reason to come back the next month. A skill gap found in Gong recordings has the same job: one next practice, not a catalog.

At Entrata I spent seven years working from evidence: field research, production data, and call recordings. I designed a field mobile experience around looking up a resident and taking the next action because people keep an app they use every day, not one leadership mandates they download. For about a year I was Product Lead with an owned engineering team. I can own look and feel as the only designer, and I can lead through a team.

I have not designed sales training or AI role play. I have designed for people who will abandon a product that does not earn the next session, and I have used Gong recordings as research, not as decoration. I live in Pleasant Grove, Utah, and I am open to remote.

I would welcome the chance to walk you through the work.

Sincerely,

Cody Duke
